

Managing the Transition

Lessons from Matariki on engineering, relationships and licence to operate

Meridian Energy

Expertly navigate the energy transition for Aotearoa New Zealand

- Grow renewable generation and firming capacity - to speed our path to a resilient, net zero future,
- Deliver cleaner, cheaper energy - through innovation that unlocks value for customers,
- Deliver operational excellence - so everything we do aligns to deliver on our goals, and
- Grow capability and culture - because how we do the mahi is what will make the real difference.

Ko wai ahau?

Kaihautū Māori Head of Māori Culture: Andre Konia.

- Providing Māori cultural support, guidance and advice across Meridian including the Board, Executive and the wider team.
- Demonstrating how a Māori world view can be successfully applied to support our purpose, values and strategic objectives.
- Supporting the growth of the relationship between Māori and Meridian.

Matariki invites us to pause, honour what has passed, and set our course for the year ahead — the same disciplines that carry an organisation through transition.

Reflection, connection, wellbeing and the collective strength of the constellation.

Pōhutukawa connects us to those who have gone before us and the legacies they leave behind.

We acknowledge who built the dams, tunnels and infrastructure we now generate power from, those who lost their lives, the staff who have moved on, and the leaders and external relationships that have shaped our thinking and operations.

Waitī is associated with freshwater and the life it sustains.

Waitī connects directly to Meridian's hydro generation, the Waitaki, Manapōuri, lakes, rivers and freshwater systems that underpin renewable electricity.

Waitā is associated with the ocean and life within the moana.

At Manapōuri, water ultimately returns to the sea, and our tuna trap and transfer programme reminds us that engineering sits within a connected system from mountain to moana.

Waipunarangi is associated with rain and the waters that nourish the whenua.

Waipunarangi reminds us that the conditions we rely on today are shaped by forces much bigger than us. Good organisations do not wait until they are tested to decide how they will behave; they prepare the systems, relationships and decision frameworks in advance.

Ururangi is associated with the winds.

We acknowledge the broader transition to renewable energy via wind and solar and the variability that comes with it.

Tupuānuku & Tupuārangi Communities & Shared Aspirations

Consultation → Partnership

Tupuānuku connects us to whenua, people and what grows from the ground.
Tupuārangi lifts our gaze toward aspirations and future possibilities.

Tupuānuku and Tupuārangi bring us to the people side of transition: community, place, aspiration and partnership. This is where the work becomes practical, because Treaty honouring is not just what we say in strategy documents; it is shown through mihi whakatau, executive learning, noho marae, SOPs, whakawātea and the Kawenata.

Hiwa-i-te-Rangi is associated with hopes, dreams and aspirations.

Hiwa-i-te-Rangi asks us to think about the future and the people who will inherit the decisions we make today. Rather than talk about that future in theory, I want to create space for Kahu to show what that future looks like in practice.

Bringing the Constellation Together

Managing transition means connecting renewable generation, Treaty honouring practice, intergenerational leadership, operations, safety, tikanga, community trust and environmental responsibility.

No single licence creates a licence to operate, just as no single star creates Matariki. Technical, environmental, legal, social, cultural and future responsibilities all matter, but the power comes from the relationships that connect them.

He mahi kai hōaka, he mahi kai tāngata

Just as work wears away sandstone, worthwhile work also demands much of the people who undertake it.
