Bicultural Competence and Confidence

Where Do You Stand?

Where Do You Stand?

Our views are shaped by our experiences, cultures, values, and backgrounds.

Some ideas today may challenge your views and that's OK

We don't need to agree; aim for better understanding

Engage openly, positively and with respect

Cultural Competence

Collaboration is about positively and purposefully exploiting difference in the way we think and act

Engineers can only succeed with others help.

Engineers work with people from different cultures from the very start of their careers.

Relationships are built on trust and enable success.

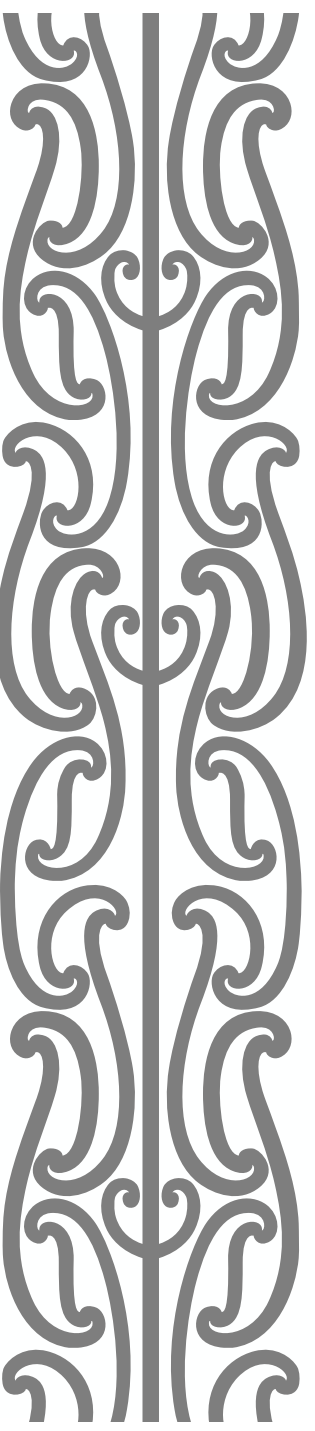

Being able to adapt your practice to account for different cultures is key to your success.

Bicultural Competence

In New Zealand, Bicultural Competence includes the ability to interact and engage with Māori.

It goes beyond an awareness of, or sensitivity to, Māori culture to include the ability to use that knowledge in cross-cultural situations, and includes the development and implementation of processes, procedures and practices that support culturally competent, and appropriate practice.

Whakawhanaungatanga

Who am I? Who are you?

In groups of 3-4, share:

- What is a weird or quirky thing that your friends or family do?
- Where does your given or family name come from or what does it mean?
- An awesome place to eat
- One thing you love about living in Ōtautahi | Christchurch?

What is biculturalism?

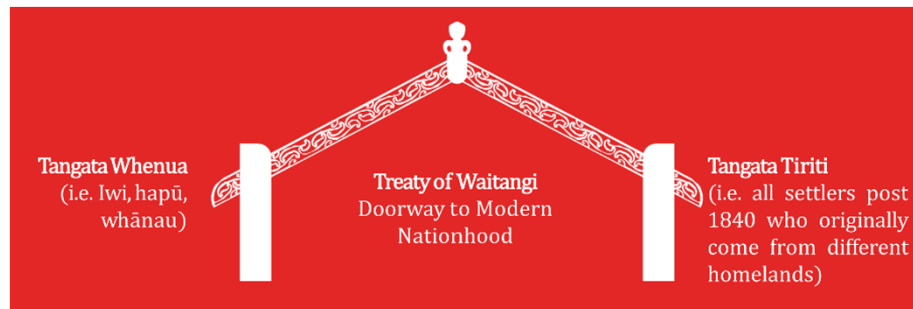

In the New Zealand context, biculturalism refers to the relationship between Māori and non-Māori.

Biculturalism goes beyond awareness of and sensitivity to Māori culture. It includes the ability to use that knowledge in cross-cultural situations, and includes the development and implementation of processes, procedures, and practices, that support culturally competent and appropriate services.

Why is biculturalism important?

Te Tiriti o Waitangi and The Treaty of Waitangi

- Our founding document, signed in 1840.
- An agreement between British Crown and Māori on rights and property, including political authority, relationships and protection
- There were two versions; English and te reo Māori.
- Treaty breaches and land-loss protests increased in 1970s, Waitangi Tribunal established in 1975

Why is biculturalism important?

For us, being part of the UC community

Why engage?

- Consultation is a meaningful discussion between parties.
- Consultation with iwi/hapu/whānau (tribes, sub-tribes, families) and other Māori groups recognises the Principles the Treaty of Waitangi (participation, protection, partnership)
- Recognises the rights of Māori under the Treaty and to ensure the views of iwi, hapu and other groups are taken into account in the planning and undertaking of projects.
- Consultation can be a legal requirement; check your legal responsibilities
- Consultation with iwi/Māori leads to better decision-making

Why engage?

(Play until 03:01)

When to engage?

- The earlier the better ; good stakeholder management means you've thought and planned for it!
- If you've thought about engaging with stakeholders after a project starts, it's too late

Who to engage?

- There is no one way to consult and the process may differ, depending on context
- Do some background work
 - Who are the people or groups I should consult with?
 - Identify who to contact – seek advice and help
 - What do they need to know? What do you need to know? Both parties need to be able to fully participate in the process
 - Limit bias – limit a pre-conceived result or outcome
 - Reflect on and address the issues as they arise

Who to engage?

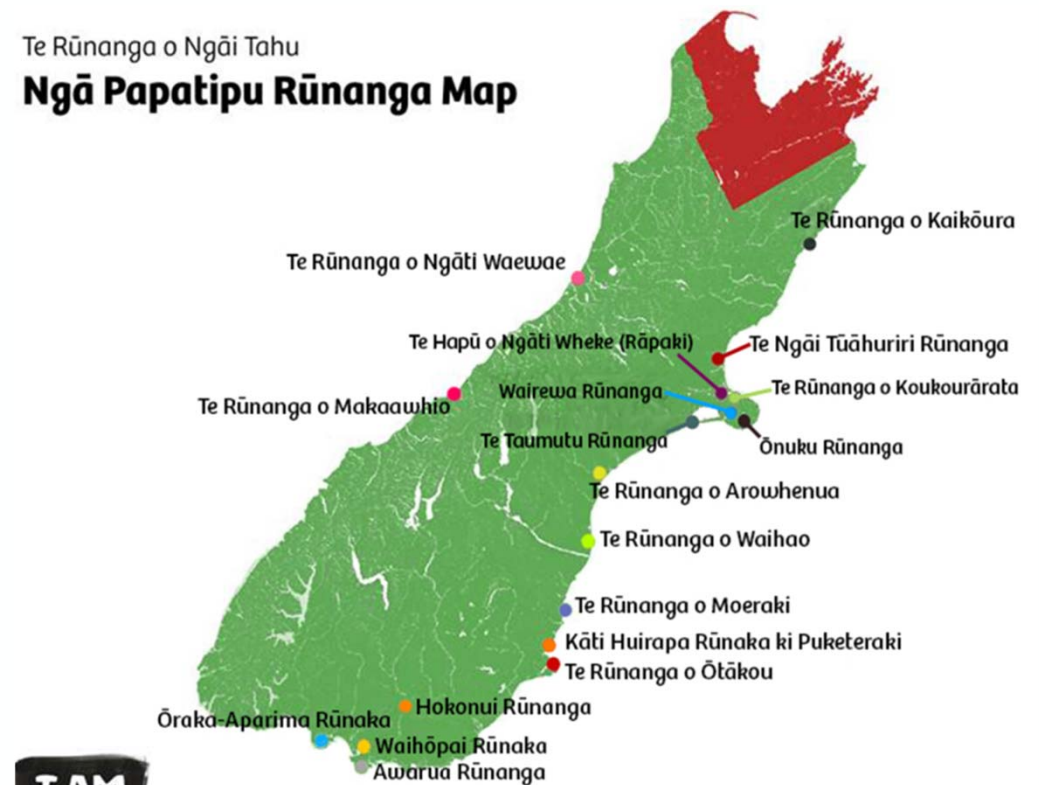

Ngā Papatipu Rūnanga

Ngāi Tahu has five primary hapū:

- Ngāti Kuri
- Ngāi Tūāhuriri
- Ngāti Irakehu
- Ngāti Huirapa
- Ngāi Te Ruahikihiki

18 Papatipu Rūnanga have formed

Engagement/consultation/co-design happens at a Papatipu Rūnanga level

How to engage?

Get these 5 right!

- People – make sure you are engaging with the right people
- Place – where to meet, discuss and negotiate
- Timing – know and respect the timeframes people work to. Maintain patience
- Language – be respectful, check for understanding, allow time for translation, speak to the person, not to your translator
- Way – the way in which you conduct yourself

Adapted from: Engineering Across Cultures

How to engage?

- Engage early - If you've thought about it, then it's already too late
- Face to face is always better rather than email and phone calls; helps build trust and respect
- Take time to establish connections and build rapport (whakawhanaungatanga)
- Hospitality (manaakitanga) matters

How to engage?

- Know what you shouldn't do (tapu)
- Seek advice and follow the lead; people who know and understand how the locals do things
 - Some companies contract people to help with this (e.g. fixers, sometimes translators can help with this)
 - Protocols: gifts, who gets to speak when, handling of business cards, how to address people etc... getting this right matters

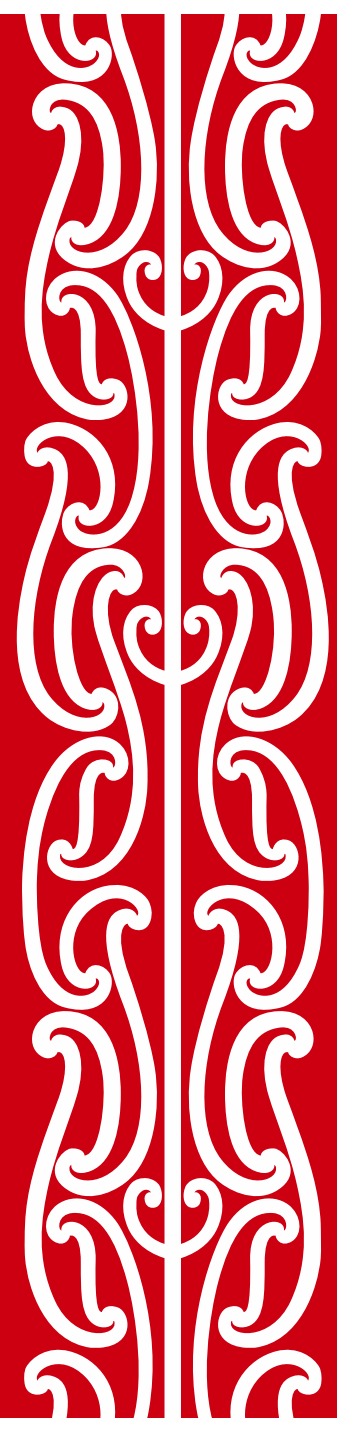

How to engage?

Examples from other cultures

- Australia:
 - Acknowledgment of Country (informal, anyone) are common for large meetings. More formal Welcome to Country; typically only performed by an elder from the local tribe
- Germany:
 - Knocking on desks rather than applause
- Japan:
 - Protocols for receiving and giving business cards
- Sir, Madam, Doctor, Alex; it all depends!

How to engage? With Māori

1. Mihi initial greeting and engagement (Part 2 of this workshop)
2. Whakawhanaungatanga – building connections
3. Kaupapa (the reason for the interaction)
4. Poroporoaki (check for understanding, what will happen next, clear about next steps)

Part 2 (optional)

Using te reo Māori

- Pronunciation is important
- But perfection isn't required
- Speak with respect and humility

Resources at the end of this pack and on LEARN to help with your pronunciation (or ask me, your tutor!)

Using te reo Māori - pronunciation

ua ue ui uo

Using te reo Māori - pronunciation

A few common vowel blends

- “ou” (e.g., koutou) is pronounced like 'oh' like "toe")
- “au” (e.g. ahau) is pronounced like ‘a-oh’ ()
- “ei” (e.g. nei or reira) is pronounced like ‘ay’

Pepeha

Ko wai koe?

- Pepeha is a way of introducing who you are in a Māori context
- We are more than our names, we are our connections – to people, land, and places
- All about whakawhanaungatanga (making connections)
- You choose what you introduce about yourself, what you're willing to share and the context of the conversation
- The order is important: start bigger than you then work down
